Troll

When the villagers heard there was a troll living under the bridge, they rushed out with sticks and saucepans to chase the troll away. No-one had asked whether the troll had done anything wrong. No-one had questioned whether it deserved to be chased away. No-one except Pablo.

When the villagers reached the bridge they banged on their saucepans as loud as they could. 'Come out!' they shouted. 'Show your face, you evil monster!'

They were not expecting to see Pablo. He came out from beneath the bridge and offered them a piece of chocolate cake. 'The troll made it,' he said, 'from a secret troll recipe.' The troll poked its little head over Pablo's shoulder. The mob gasped, then fell silent.

'Anyone?' asked Pablo. 'It is the finest cake you will ever eat.'

Brushing aside the others and mumbling 'cowards', a village elder put down his stick and took a bite. 'Oh my! The boy's right!' he said. And then began a mad scramble for the next piece.

By the day's end, many more villagers had surrounded the bridge. But they had brought with them plates instead of saucepans. One of the villagers even offered the troll a job at the tea house.

'Oh my! The boy's right!'

What was the boy right about?

- what the troll ate
- where the troll lived
- how the troll cooked
- what the troll looked like
